GIORDANO'S "ANDRE CHENIER" REVIVED AT THE METROPOLITAN

Impressive Performance, Received With Favor, Has Congenial Roles for Singers.

ook by Luigi Illica, music by Umberto Glordano, was performed at the Metropolitan Opera House last evening. It was to have been produced on Saturday afternoon, February 26, but was postponed because Mr. Gigli was ill. It had never been heard before in the Metropolitan, but none the less cannot have the honor of a record as a novelty. It was first heard here at the Academy of Music November 13, 1886.

Tetrazzini, carried the burden of the heroine's agonies.

The composer has been represented here by other operas, "Siberla" and "Fedora," the latter associated with the Hogarthian curves of Miss Cavalieri. "Andre Chenier" is a better work than either, and its production yesterday might have caused some wonder at its long neglect. It is not a great opera, but this is a barren period, a day of mustard seed and salt, and in midst of such little things "Andre Chenier" seems to stand upright and carry a proud crown of foliage.

The story is simply. The hero, Chenier, was a distinguished French poet of the time of the Revolution. He wrote like a Greek, and left works which his countrymen rightly regard as master-places. His "Auticany Fesnesis sur loves" be has a thoroughly congenial role.

kiss of Mademoiselle Louisette.

The libretto provides strong emotional situations, such as are essential to the inspiration of the operatic composer, and furnishes also a sufficient amount of pictorial movement to give interest for the eye. The background of the Revolution fills the stage with sansculottes, beribboned and cockaded citizens, glimpses of Sieves, Thuriot, Fouque and even the "sea green, incorruptible" one himself. We hear the insane populace trolling the "Carmagnole" and a rumbling bass in the distance chanting the "Marseillaise." We see Republican guards and still more Republican spies.

nole" and a rumbling bass in the distance chanting the "Marselliatse." We see Republican guards and still more Republican sples.

A minuet graces the first scene and effective choruses others. But to come to Hecuba, the music allotted to the cingers is generally excellent. The dialogue is in arioso form, supple, sinuous, wrought of facile melodic fragments. The vocal climaxes embodying the emolional situations have the vigor of melodramatic utterance and sometimes are genuinely moving. Chenier's reclutation in the first scene combines not only individual musical quality but a quick disclosure of the character of the man.

His "Avis aux Francais sur leurs Veritables Ennemis" antagonized the Nationalists, who arrested and guillotined him. In the opera he is shown as a guest at the palace of a noble lady whose daughter invites him to recite poetry and ridicules him, but is afterward overcome by his eloquence and asks forgiveness. The two become enamored, and when Chenier is caught in the toils of the revolutionists the girl, substituting herself for one of the condemned prisoners, goes with him to receive the final kiss of Mademolselle Louisette.

The libretto provides strong emotional situations, such as are essential to the inspiration of the operatic composer, and furnishes also a sufficient amount of pictorial movement to give voce. His art is essentially lyric and possesses an individual charm. He sang the music of Chenier admirably, and while his acting added nothing to the vague outline furnished by the drama, it took nothing from it. The audience received his offering with acclamations.
